Janice V. Bowie, PhD, MPH

SPEAKER BIO

Dr. Janice Bowie is Professor Emeritus in the Department of Health, Behavior, and Society and the Director of the Doctor of Public Health (DrPH) degree program at the Johns Hopkins Bloomberg School of Public Health in Baltimore, Maryland. She is a core faculty in the Johns Hopkins Center for Health Disparities Solutions and the Johns Hopkins Center for Health Equity. She is an expert in health disparities and community-based research methods. Dr. Bowie's research interests include health equity, health disparities, cancer control, spirituality, women's health, community engagement, and urban health. Her research examines approaches that lead to the success and sustainability of community-based interventions and the implications of religion and spirituality for prevention and treatment. She has a particular interest in using mixed methods and transdisciplinary collaborations to address social influences of health and reduce pervasive disparities. Prior to joining Johns Hopkins, Bowie spent over 15 years at Virginia's Department of Health, where she held several positions, including director of the Division of Chronic Diseases. Dr. Bowie earned her PhD from Johns Hopkins Bloomberg School of Public Health in 1997, her MPH from University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill in 1986 and BS from Shaw University in 1974.
